The Buddy System: Human-Computer Teams
The field of forensic facial recognition depends on highly refined traits such as visual acuity, cognitive discrimination, memory recall, and elimination of bias. Humans, as well as computers running machine learning (ML) algorithms, possess these abilities. And it is the combination of the two—a human facial recognition expert teamed with a computer running ML analyses of facial image data—that provides the most accurate facial identification, according to a recent 2018 study.

UMD researchers awarded $5.3M NIH BRAIN Initiative grant

COLLEGE PARK, Md – Three University of Maryland researchers will receive approximately $5.3 million in new federal support for research that is part of a larger project designed to radically improve our understanding of the connection between brain activity and human behavior

Assistant Professor Behrta Babadi (ECE), Professor Patrick Kanold (Biology), and Professor Wolfgang Losert, faculty whose work falls under UMD's Brain and Behavior Initiative (BBI), are part of an 11-investigator team that has won one of nine recent BRAIN Initiative U19 center grants awarded by the National Institutes of Health. The U19 center grants are among the largest awards given by NIH and are dedicated to highly ambitious, multi-disciplinary, and multi-university projects.

The Maryland researchers are part of "Readout and control of spatiotemporal neuronal codes for behavior," a $20M, five-year project led by John Maunsell, a professor of neurobiology at the University of Chicago. Preliminary data for part of the grant were obtained with the support of seed funding to Kanold and Losert from BBI.

Their multi-institution U19 project team is composed of computational and systems neuroscientists, physicists and engineers. Other institutions with investigators involved in the project include NIH's National Institute of Mental Health, the New York University School of Medicine, the Universidad Nacional de San Martin in Argentina, and the Instituto Italiano di Tecnologia.
